This paragraph from dailytech.com just begged to be turned into a directed graph.
I've filled in a few additional lines for clarity's sake.
This is by no means complete, just something to do in 10 minutes while waiting for shit to compile.

To summarize for those who need a quick recap, the accusations, as they stand, are currently that the convicted computer hacker (Assange) accused the convicted computer hacker (Lamo) of colluding with a convicted computer hacker (Poulsen) to spread misinformation/engineered information, but it may actually be the convicted computer hacker (Assange) who is looking to spread engineered information in order to discredit the convicted computer hacker (Lamo). And in the process the convicted hacker (Assange) may have outed his partner in social engineering, an ex-hacker (Nadim).
